About Ikuta Ryokuchi Park

Ikuta Ryokuchi Park is the largest green space in Kawasaki City. The park is surrounded by characteristic woods called Zokibayashi in the rolling Tama Hills of Kanto area. Zokibayashi is a semi-natural environment managed by local people as coppices for over a thousand years. The woods consists of several oaks, hornbeams and maples. They used to be cut down every 20-30 years as fuels until gas supply began in Kawasaki City after the World War II.

The park is one of the most important green areas in Kawasaki for its wide range of wild plants and animals. In particular, an alder community and the two habitats of Genji-fireflies (Luciola cruciata) are remarkable treasures of KAWASAKI city.

Though Ikuta Ryokuchi Park is a valuable sanctuary of wildlife, some of its impressive gardens also attract visitors with seasonal flowers such as cherry blossoms at Mt. Masugata, 1,200 irises in the Iris Garden, 3,000 hydrangeas in Ajisaiyama Hill, as well as paddy fields among the hills.

Three Museums

You can experience both traditional and modern sides of Japan at the three museums in Ikuta Ryokuchi Park. Nihon Minkaen is an open-air museum with 25 traditional houses from the Edo period. Dento-Kogeikan is an additional facility of Minkaen. You can try traditional indigo-dyeing in the workshop. Kawasaki Municipal Science Museum features exhibitions related to the nature in Kawasaki City. You can also enjoy an amazing starry sky with high-performance planetarium projector MEGASTAR-III FUSION. The Taro Okamoto Museum of Art features works of an avant-garde artist Taro Okamoto and his parents, Ippei and Kanoko Okamoto.

Firefly luminescence

The breeding season of fireflies starts in middle of June. You can observe emitting lights of Genji-fireflies (Luciola cruciata) after sunset at the two habitats in the park. Because the luminescence term of the fireflies fluctuates between one to two weeks every year, it is recommended that you contact in advance at the Ikuta Ryokuchi East Gate visitor center.
